The last Sunday night concert at the Casis was an extremely enjoyable one, although comparatively few people were present to appreciate it. The soloists were William Car and Helle Cole. We have never heard Mr. Carieton to better advantage. He was in exrelient voice and he sang several songs with admirable effect. The "Toreador Song" from Carmen, and a French selection, were especially well rendered. Mrs. Cole was also at her test. "Esmeralda" was gracefully vocalized and won an encore for the singer who gave "Suwanee River." The time-worn plan tation ballad was rendered with such simplicity and sweet pathos that the infliction of it was forgiven. The most notable feature of the orchestral part of the programme was the first performance of Rudolph Aronson's latest composition, a polka called "Pretty Maiden." ninds one in some bars of the "Haby Polka," but the lack of originality is fully oned for by the dash and rhythm of the piece. It is bound to become popular for dancing purposes this Summer. Gound's "Funeral March of a Marionette," which is al, ways well played by this band, met with the sual applause. The March from Tannh did not receive good treatment from the musicians, who were weak where they should have been strong. The section of the programme played in the upper pavilion com prised a number of popular sele of them particularly new, but all of the catchy. This is the sort of music best liked by frequenters of the roof-garden, who mix it with cigars and drinkables.

terms: (Juite an excitement was created but night by the attack Manager Bert made on John F. Theum, in front of his theatre, the California. The following account of the affair I clip from the Califol this morning. It is in the main correct: "While the romantic grievances of the Count of Monte Cristo were being avenged on the stage of the California Theatre last evening, the unromantic grievances of the flert family were having their share of vengeance in the front of the bosse. The story of the prologue to the drama, as told to a reporter dramatic sheet published in this city, and is also correspondent to a New York dramatic weekly. In his dua capacity as editor and correspondent, Mr. Thrum ha indulged in many personalities concerning journalist and theatrical people on this coast, and has been Thrum has not confined his abuse to the mai of the family, but has of late made persona remarks concerning the Mesdames Bert. On Si last, Mr. Bert, through his attorney, notified the printer of Thrum's paper that he had been public highly disagreeable and libellous items against W. F. Bert and now even against his family,' and that he, the sublisher, would be held personally responsible for any future articles of like nature. In vesterday's issue of the paper in question an editorial reply was ma notification, and the language used was more forcible than polite. Between the acts Thrum appeared in the foyer of the California and Bert immediately approached him with the evident intent to do or die. As told by some witnesses of the scene, it ran as follows: Hert took Thrum out to the sidewalk and there asked if he intended to continue his personal attacks through the press. Thrum, backing away, replied that he certainly did. Whereupon Bert's fist and Thrum's head came in ontact and the head went down. Throm gathered himself up from the pavement and bolted across the street, followed by Hert's indignant glances, and also by Bert's youngest brother. The brother had a sixuable cane in his hand, and with the same he whacked Thrum rigorously and brought him to the earth once more Bearing in mind the old adage of 'the man who fights and runs, etc., Thrum made a second and more suc-cessful effort at retreat, and hied him to the City Prison Hospital, where he had his wounds of the body patches up. What measures he may take to heal his mental hes are as yet unknown, for up to a late hour last night no arrests had been made, although the air was full of threatening rumors." Tillotson's co. is playing in the interior this week, re-turning to the Standard Theatre next week for a few nights of Queena. Let hun out once step forth and the world a contrast to warrant from tonished that it required a contrast to warrant from men a full recognition of his merits. Among the best actors in the profession are the leading men of our great companies. Mr. Lloyd's Damon was the noblest character that ever delighted an audience in this city. Groupe Ober, as Pythias, demonstrated clearly that his facts is not circumscribed by light comedy in which however, he doubtless exvels. He is an indefatigable bester, the second six and worker, throwing his whole soul into the play, and giving all his energies to the profession. His wife, Ada Oher, is an actress of rare abilities, as illustrate Oher, is an acress of rare abilities, as illustrated in occ-interpretation of the character of Calanthe, in which the actives was sholly hidden beneath the guse of the brautiful@syracusan. Cora Reddield, in the character of Damon's wife, did quite well, ably sustaining that diffi-cult part. J. H. Shewell, as Diomyans, and fecong-letys, as Philintius, acquitted themselves spiendidly, and fully justified the good aganism heretofore acquired by them among our people. Fred Power, sen of Ada (Marray) Oher, did the character of Luculius almost to perfection. This youth of nineteen in a child of promise, and lads fair to shine in the profession. The re-well and hole fair to shine in the profession. After the entertainment Mr. Wilton was called upon the stage, when Treasurer Daniels, on behalf of the orembers of the co. in a neat speech presented the beneficiary with an ele-gant soiver ice-pitcher service. As is usual on such casions, the recipient was struck dumb with surprise.

ZANESVILLE. I was so apprehensive that my review would be regarded as inordinately long, that I was moved to cut it short, and it must have seemed to the asthetic reader about as abrupt in its termination as a bob-tailed cut. What I wished particularly to say to the dramatic ion, I did not say at all. It is with refere advance men, advertising, and the use of paper. When I worked on the editorial staff of one of our mening I worked on the editorial staff of one of our morning dailies, this was how the festive "advance" worked the racket. He would come marching into the office in companyes. Manager Hoge, and, after the customary introductions, would launch forth in laudatory terms concerning the unbounded attractions of his star and the perfectly phenomenal business that he or she had been doing. Waxing more eloquent, and consequently more oblivious to the truth, he would apastrophize after this fashion: "Why geatlemen, I have now in my clothes three telegrams from our manager in which he clothes three telegrams from our manager in which be assures me that, at Skunkypod last might, long before the curtain went up, he was obliged to turn away three thousand people who were frantically shaking double the price of admission under his nose." We did not wonder so much how three thousand people could be turned away in a town that only had twenty-free hundred population, as we did at the manager's sending three telegrams when one would have been amply sufficient. After the levely foreranner had even tired out creat. After the levely forerunner had even tired out give instructions in acting and electric nimeli talking about his attraction, he would, nime on left and for Cincinnati, and will pe times out of ten, begin a series of blood-curdling arecedstes which tos regarded his position as here) cere all precisely sinks. All this time we used to suffer untold agony because the "devil" was clamsring for copy and we knew the comps were swearing their souls away into perdition because the devil wasn't getting his dur. Now, how could a wretched reporter, edor any other kind of a newspaper man feel kindly toward an attraction that sent such a blatherskite ahead to terment the writers, where time was precious and who had to stay out of bed a couple of hours longer on account of his obtuseness? So I respectfully suggest to the propie who have their money invested in shows to choose for their advance or press agent a man with Another thing : in common sense business ideas. Another thing; in advertising an attraction it is a mistake I think to make we much use of extracts. People care very little what other towns or other people think, and have come to regard all newspaper commendations as so many paid puffs. A better plan is to take a larger space or make use of a display ad., and, above all things, use large showy, attractive paper on the walls. Take, for example, the flar doplays of the Silver King, Monte Crate, Devil's Auction, Around the World, etc., etc. Even the hurried, careworn passer-by will heaton a glance at the illumited well and recall the ocean portrayed. Hil course such showy, artistic paper is cety expensive; but it is with the dramatic bounces, as it is in all others, the man who wine is the man who rest after his second with Kate Claston. Lastnood's diezy conglumeration of meaning spends freely. Why is it that such shows as histonically instation of Frite Kannet at the Grand, and week, was a complete Demonstration of a second spends freely. and forepaugh's gather in the whole exectry-side with with the back towardige thrown in ?

This would be all very well if grand ra were a popular institution, but it is not. The music is of a higher form than is acceptable to the masses, and the cost cing it in a proper style effectually bars out the poorer classes, inasmuch as high rates of admission are necessary to cover the heavy expenses. Therefore, grand opera, fitly presented, must always nain a form of recreation confined to the weathy and the fashionable. As for the use of English words, there can be no doubt of the benefit of the plan were it consistent with fine representations. But neither England nor America luces the best artists, and recourse nust be had to the European stage for supplies. The Italians and French are not noted for correct pronunciation of our language, and they could not be utilized, even were they willing to make themselves ridiculous in English opera. Broken glish is less readily understood than oice Italian, so nothing would be gained by the change. Heside, English being a er tongue than Italian, it does not flow along so melodiously with the entrancing strains of the great composers.

The First Cast of The Rivals. The late Mr. John Hernard, actor, manager, gossip, good-fellow and secretary of the eefsteak Club, travelling from Norwich to Portsmouth, toward the latter part of the Eighteenth century, delayed his journey in order to be present at the first representation of The Rivals. Richard Brinsley Sheridan, then burely twenty-four years of age, and then barrely twenty-four years of age, and having to support not only a pretty house in Orchard street, Portham Square, but a pretty wife, wrote to his father in-law, with that hopeful spirit that no misfortune could ever suited to him. Shuter was also the description of the suited to him. Shuter was also the description of the suited to him. hopeful spirit that no misfortune could ever repress, that a comedy of his would be m rehearsal at Covent Garden in a few days.

"I have done it," he wrote, "at Mr. Harriso (the manager's) own request; it is now complete in his hands and preparing for the stage. He and some of his friends also, who have heard it, assure me in the most flattering terms that there is not a doubt of its success. It will be very well played, and Harris assures me that the least shilling I shall get (if it succeeds) will be ais hundred pounds. I shall make no secret of it toward the time of representation, that it may not lose any support my friends can give it. I had not spirit that the property of Sir Anthony was a suited to him. Shuter was also the representative of Old Hardeastle, Paging, Druggett, Abrahamides and Contain it is that he possessed no education it was an effort for him to sign his own. The representation of The Rivals was a trying the added, "if there is any one here we pirit of the new comedy were barely tolerated. It was up hill work at first, but the wit, the life, the infectious humor of Sheridan eventually triumphed. It was the fight of Nature and novelty against affectation and conventionality, and, in the end, Nature got the better of the struggle. The comparative failure of the comedy on the first night is generally and, as I shall endeavor to show, wife died this morning, and I can't ery. who impersonated Sir Lucius O'Trigger. In who impersonated Sir Lucius O'Trigger. In his preface to the play, Sheridan distinctly states that the piece was withdrawn from the stage so that he might "remove those imperfections in the first representation which were too obvious to escape reprehension, and too numerous to admit of a hasty correction. The burden of the preface is, indeed, an excuse for the author's work. The character, and not the impersonation, of Sir Lucius O'Trigger is commented upon, and the performers are thanked "for the exertion of their several abilities." Blooknest Lineary Companies and one bad one. He was pleasant to look upon, his voice was musical and powerful, he had much experience was an artor, and he had played Lago uncommonly well to the erful, he had much experience as an artor, and he had played Lago uncommonly well to the Othello of Spranger Barry. All this was very good, but unfortunately Mr. Lee held too high an opinion of humseit. His skill conceit was absolutely intolerable, and his overweening vanity drew down upon his head the anatheman of every manager he met, and he was renowned for the quickness with which his theatrical engagements were terminated. Eventually not a theatre was open to him save that at Bath, where he retired as acting manager, and where he supported himself by acting and lecturing, in addition to kreping accounts, until his death. It is easy to imagine that when the pompous Mr. Lee found the audience of jected to the character of Sir Lucus, he resigned the part, for no man likes to be resigned the patt, for no man likes to be hissed, even for the author of a play. It was not the actor to whom the audience objected, but the character. That Lee did not act builty on the occasion we have the evidence of Hernard, certainly no had judge in these matters. "Nothing," he writes, "can be more unfounded than the reason which is commonly assigned for the first night's failure of this play—namely, the acting of a Mr. Lee in Sir Lucius () Trigger, I re nember his acting very well; it was very er his acting very well; it was very indifferent, especially to the audience, who cared as little about Sir Lucius as did Lydia; it was his juxtaposition with Mrs. Malaprop that brought him into notice—her disease was infectious, and contaminated all that came into her society. The other characters were better drawn than his, and had the advantage of heing supported by established favorites, but, under any other circumstances, I will be bound to say Mr. Lee's acting would have passed muster." Sufficient evidence all this, I should say, to prove that the acting of John Lee in the way perilled the success of the first performance of The Riva's. The actor who succeeded Lee as Sir Lucius was Laurence Clinch.

support my friends can give it. I had not written a line of it two months ago, except a scene or two which I believe you have seen in an odd act of a little farce." The play thus to Whitefield's; at three in the afternoon it brought him fame as well. At first it staggered like a giant under its own weight; it trembled for a moment in the balance, was cut by Sheridan—liberal-handed in this, as in everything else—and, after a short, sharp struggle, blossomed into a lasting success. This was probably the most joyful period in the life of its author, but the cup of happiness had its dash of bitterness, for old Thomas Sheridan, still at war with his son, watched the progress of the play at its initial performance, silently, and was prepared to it; ext, drank and made merry, and I experiment. The house was packed with the supporters of the sentimental rubbish and moral poems of the day, and the bustle and moral poems of the day, and the bustle and moral poems of the calculation in the calculation in "Shuter who never cared a single pin, Whether he left out nonsense or put in." Whether he left out nonsease or put in."

Ned Shuter was noted for his clever imitation of the street cries of London. On one occasion he followed through several streets a man whose cry he knew to be peculiar. At last Shuter stopped him, made himself known, and told him he had followed him for half an hour in the hope of hearing the familiar cry. "Why. Master Shuter," said the hawker, "my wife died this morning, and I can't cry." Shuplay, and he once attempted Shylock! He was capital as Falstaff, and was admired in the characters of Scrub, Master Stephen, Launcelot, Peachum and Sir Francis, in The Busylhody. His final benefit was in May, 1776, at Covent Garden, when he played Falstaff. He died on the 1st of the following November, in his forty-eighth year, and was interred at St. Paul's, Covent Garden, where rest so many of our departed comedians.

He played with Rich until 1735, when he went over to Drury Lane. He was the original French cook in Budsley's Sir John Cockle, and he was besides the first representative of the following parts: the Beau, in Lethe; Flash, in Miss in Her Teens; Jack Meggott, in The Suspicious Husband; Dick, in The Apprentice, Block, in The Reprisal; Lotty, in the following parts: the Beau, in Lethe; Flash, in Miss in Her Teens; Jack Meggott, in The Suspicious Husband; Dick, in The Apprentice. Block, in The Reprisal; Lotty, in The Good-natured Man; and Captain Ironsides in The Brothers. His Slender was a perfect picture of simplicity, and Kitty Clive, admirable as she was as Katherine, was outshone by the extravagant grotesqueness of his Petruchio. Boladil was his great part, but he excelled in Marphot and he was unequalled in Tourhstone. In perfection of dressing, in the manner of his time, he was unrivalled; his Mercutio, as regards appearance, was the model of a gentleman of the day. The youthfulness and hooyaney of his style may be gathered from the fact that he was called upon to "create" lack Absolute when he was only two years short of saxty in age. Indeed, his youth never left him. He was light, bright and buoyant to the last. "His scamps were perfect in their cool impudence; his needen tops shome with a brazen impertmence, his hops of an older time glistened with an elegant rascality; his most heroes were superdously but suspiciously outrageous; his every day simpletons vulgarly solid; and his Shake-spearean characters brumful and running ever with Shakespearean spirit. "When off the stage Woodward bore himself rather seriously; but he had no sooner got before the foot labbe than his face beamed with merriment and brought him instantiy into the favor of his abschence.
